The “Historical Museum of the City of Luxembourg”, realised by the communal authorities and inaugurated in June 2006, brings together an immense documentation of the more than millennial history of the capital of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg. Its architecture resumes the main characteristics of the old fortress.

Charged with shell works, the company Félix GIORGETTI was faced with particularly complicated and delicate tasks, requiring high level engineering skills. In fact, the matter was to satisfy the constraint to assure a complete renovation and a substantial extension of the existent historical places by conserving a maximum of the precious, old architectural substance.

The task of the company has been particularly arduous because of the necessity to realise, with powerful equipment, earthworks in the rock and till a depth of 10 m under the existing buildings.
